Robert Levitt, MD, FACOG: "Listening to my patients concerns, simplifying medical information and making them a partner in their health care is an important aspect of how I practice OB GYN. I appreciate that the issues my patients bring to the office can have a profound effect on every aspect of their lives."

Jessica Berger-Weiss, MD, FACOG: "I strive to connect with my patients as individuals....to put her at ease and comfortably address her issues and concerns with the most up to date medical expertise and skill.... I listen carefully so I can provide the most current and optimal care."

Adrienne Potts, MD, FACOG: "My patients are always greeted with a calm, compassionate demeanor they find extremely comforting. It is important to me to be able to take time with my patients. I strive to be their partner in making healthcare decisions."

Courtney Levenson, MD: "My focus is on whole-body wellness. I strive to provide compassionate care for all stages of a woman's life and believe in direct communication, educating my patients and involving them in their own health."

Ashley Artis, MD: "Having a strong desire to ensure that all my patients are fully informed, I use my expertise, training and education to be an advocate for women, helping them navigate and understand obstetric and gynecologic issues. I feel strongly that patients will make good decisions when they become active participants in their health care."

Melissa Groves, MD: "We are all patients at some point in our lives. Reflecting on those moments has helped me grow as a physician so that I can provide clear, compassionate and culturally sensitive care to my patients. The times when I left a doctor's office uncertain about my plan of care, is something I do not want patients to experience. Informed patients make for motivated and healthy patients, which is what we are striving for. When we work together, the outcomes are always better."

Heather Brillhart, MD: "I strive to help my patients feel welcome and at ease in order to develop an environment where we can work together to tackle even the most intimate problems and concerns. It is most important to me to help my patients understand their options and plan of care".

Allison Ladner, CNM, WHNP: "I am notably passionate about inspiring my patients to live a healthy lifestyle. I have great enthusiasm for empowering women and providing education so that every woman leaves feeling strong, capable, and informed."
